Casted a Spell On My Heart

It was a perfect night for Halloween as a cool breeze had set its way into Hawkins. From the cliff the lake water dazzled in the moonlight, reflecting the perfectly round full moon. You stepped away from the edge turning to see your best friend, Robin looking up at the sky, a broom in hand.

“Are we good to fly then, Captain?” Robin turned to a gave you a wide smile.

“It looks like we are Dingus, don’t see or sense any rain clouds coming our way. Are you ready to fly?”

“Of course, why wouldn’t I be? This is a chance of a lifetime to fly on a broom with witch, especially because that witch is my best friend.” you smiled, feeling a small pain as you finished that sentence.

“I guess this is a very magical moment for you. Alright, lemme explain the rules.” she turned to you, putting the broom horizontal before letting go; it began to float on its own.

“Rule number , you must hold onto me at all times. You can’t hold onto the broom or else you might throw us off balance and send us spiraling down to maybe our doom if I can’t catch us in time. Rule number 2, try not to wiggle or thrash around too much, that could also make us fall off. And those are the rules.” you raised your hand.

“Question Captain.”

“Yes, what is your question?” you grinned devilishly.

“What if I have to use the bathroom?” you watched her face contort into a small frown before she started giggling.

“That’s why I told you to use the bathroom earlier, Dingus. I am not stopping for bathroom breaks on this broom ride!” she shook her head with a slight smile.

“Alright then I think I am ready to fly!” you walked up to the broom and stood there with a determined smile on your face.

“Ok then, let’s get to it.” she walked up to, placing her hand on the middle of the broom she pushed it down to below her waist level. She stepped over it with one leg then sat down on the broom. You followed how she did it, stepping one leg over and sitting down. Sitting down on a witches broom was quite a new experience; the broom didn’t feel uncomfortable rather it felt oddly like a normal wooden chair. Both of your legs were still touching the ground, but you could already feel the broom holding most of your weight.

“Ok (Y/N), I need you to listen very closely. When I say ‘1, 2,3’, we are going to sprint towards the edge of the cliff and then before we jump off I’m going to say ‘lift up now’ which means lift your legs up. Ya got that, sweetheart?” she turned to you, a small blush creeping up on your cheeks.

“Mhm, I understand; run at ‘3’ and lift up legs at ‘now’. I am ready to go.”

“Hold on to me now.” you wrapped your arms around her waist.

“Alright 1...2...3!” you both started running as fast as you could, the broom moving slightly between your legs. A sense of adrenaline ran through you, most likely the realization of what you were about to do. The cliff’s edge was approaching faster than you thought, your arms tightened lightly around Robin’s waist as y’all finally reached the edge.

“Lift up now!” and you took a deep breath in lifting up your legs, and felt the two of you swiftly flew up into the air. The two of you were vertical flying up into the night’s sky. You felt like you could touch the moon from there but remembered not to move your hands from around Robin’s waist. Once up high enough almost near the clouds the broom soon leveled itself horizontally and the two of you were soon flying through the air. You looked down and watched as you passed many trees in Hawkins forest.

“This is so awesome!”

“Oh you haven’t seen anything awesome yet. Just watch.” before you could ask, she spoke a few words to which you could only assume were directions for the broom as the two of you suddenly shot downward, spinning in circles. You two fell back down almost to the ground but then went back horizontally zooming towards the forest tries. You bobbed and weaved through the trees, picking up faster and faster speeds.

“This is so fucking awesome!” you shouted and then to two of you shot back up. You let out a ‘woohoo’ as the two of you went past the clouds, now the bright pale moon felt seemingly bigger now. The broom moved slowly through the air, giving you a nice chance to look at the stars more closely. The stars seem to have painted the sky; it seemed that there were even more of them than what you would usually see when you would go stargazing in the Hawkins fields.

“Is this the best spell I’ve done for you?” Robin’s voice startled your train of thought.

“What?”

“I said, is this the best spell I’ve done for you?” her voice was soft and almost sound like she was asking for approval. You thought about all the cool spells she’s done for you, turning you invisible, making you animal buddies out different elements, but there was one spell you could never forget her doing for you.

“No, although this one is definitely going on my top five list.” you smiled looking up at her as she turned around to face you.

“Hm, what spell was it then?”

“The one where you casted a spell on my heart.” you grinned sheepishly, your face heating up and mind racing hoping she got what you were saying. She squinted her eyes a bit, obviously thinking of an answer until her face went completely straight; her face went fully red.

“D-did you just admit to being in l-love with me?” you found her stutter cute giving her a small nod. She bit her lip a small smile creeping up on the corner of her lips.

“Well, I guess that’s good for you then because I fell for you too, (Y/N).” you leaned up and kissed her lips, Robin leaning back to get a better feel of your lips. The kiss was short but sweet and soft.

“You know you are such a Dingus right? That was so cheesy.” she chuckled flying you two back down bellow the clouds.

“Well now I’m your Dingus and don’t lie you love me being cheesy.” you rested your head on her shoulder.

“I do love you being cheesy but you’re not just my Dingus anymore.” you shifted your head to look up at her.

“You’re my pretty girl.” she leaned in again connecting your lips again and many more times that night as you flew through the night sky.
